Historical Legend

The legend of Kamada Ekadashi was described by Lord Shri Krishna to Pandu's son Dharmraj Yudhishtara. Prior to this, Vashist Muni had narrated the majesty of this fast to King Dilip, which is as follows:

In pristine times, a king named Pundrik ruled in the town of Bhogipur. In his city, many Apsaras, eunuchs (kinnars), and Gandharva used to live and their court was filled with these people. Gandharvas and Kinnars used to sing daily. There was a gorgeous apsara named Lalita and her husband Lalit, a noble Gandharva lived there. There was enormous love between the two and they were always lost in each other's memories.

During one time when Gandharva Lalit was singing in the court of King, abruptly he remembered his wife Lalita. Due to this cause, he couldn't control his voice pitch. A serpent called Karkat saw this, and told this to King Pundrik. The king became annoyed when he heard this and cursed Lalit to be a demon. After this, for many years Lalit kept roaming in the demon yoni. His wife sustained to remember him but would become sad after seeing her husband in this situation.

After a few years approved, Lalit's wife Lalita went to Sage Rishyamook on the Mount Vindhya, and started asking for the remedy for her husband. The sage took pity on them and asked to do Kamada Ekadashi fast. After receiving his blessing, Gandharva-wife return to her place and respected the Kamada Ekadashi fast. With the effect of this Ekadashi fast, they got free of their curse and their Gandharva appearance back.
